

Legal advice for you or someone you know

With lockdown easing moving at a pace now, many of us have been back in the workplace and taking part in activities that were on hold for the previous few months. This change continues to result in questions from both business leaders and individuals which we seek to answer in this edition of Ready for the Future.

For your business - keeping your business going

So many businesses have faced interruption and financial losses as a result of Covid-19 that they are turning to their insurance policies to determine if any recoveries can be made. In our recent webinar we presented the issues faced by businesses in relation to insurance claims, the insurance industry's current position, how to make a claim and the alternative options should your claim be unsuccessful.

We want to understand whether Covid-19 has changed how we work, forever. Join us during our webinar to discuss home working, the leadership challenges in managing a remote workforce, our wellbeing, and much more.

ASK THE EXPERT

Michael Stokes, Head of Employment & Immigration answers the questions you sent us on furlough and Covid-19 employment matters.

Questions include:

- What protection can employers take in the event of an employee breaching lockdown rules and then as a result, finding themselves in isolation for 14 days?
- How do employers and employees fair where they're subject to different rules on travel between their place of work and their home?
- What advice would you give people about selection criteria for redundancy and how to manage that?

READY FOR THE FUTURE

For you - protecting yourself and your loved ones

As the property market begins to increase momentum again after lockdown stalled activity, there may be good news for those who have already bought their next house but are still trying to sell their current home.

University students are usually heading home for the summer now, and those returning next year or planning to start higher degrees, are keen to secure their accommodation for their next academic year. Often this is done well ahead of time to ensure that they can secure the best offering before exam results are released in August and first year students then push up demand. In light of Covid-19, many students (and parents, who may be paying for or guaranteeing accommodation) are wondering what to do for the best.
