Helping rights holders, producers, film and music agents

Agents are often the lynchpin of a project, pulling together actors for a production or musicians to create an unforgettable event. Having found the right location, person or act, getting the right contract in place is vital, both to the individuals concerned and the success of the production.

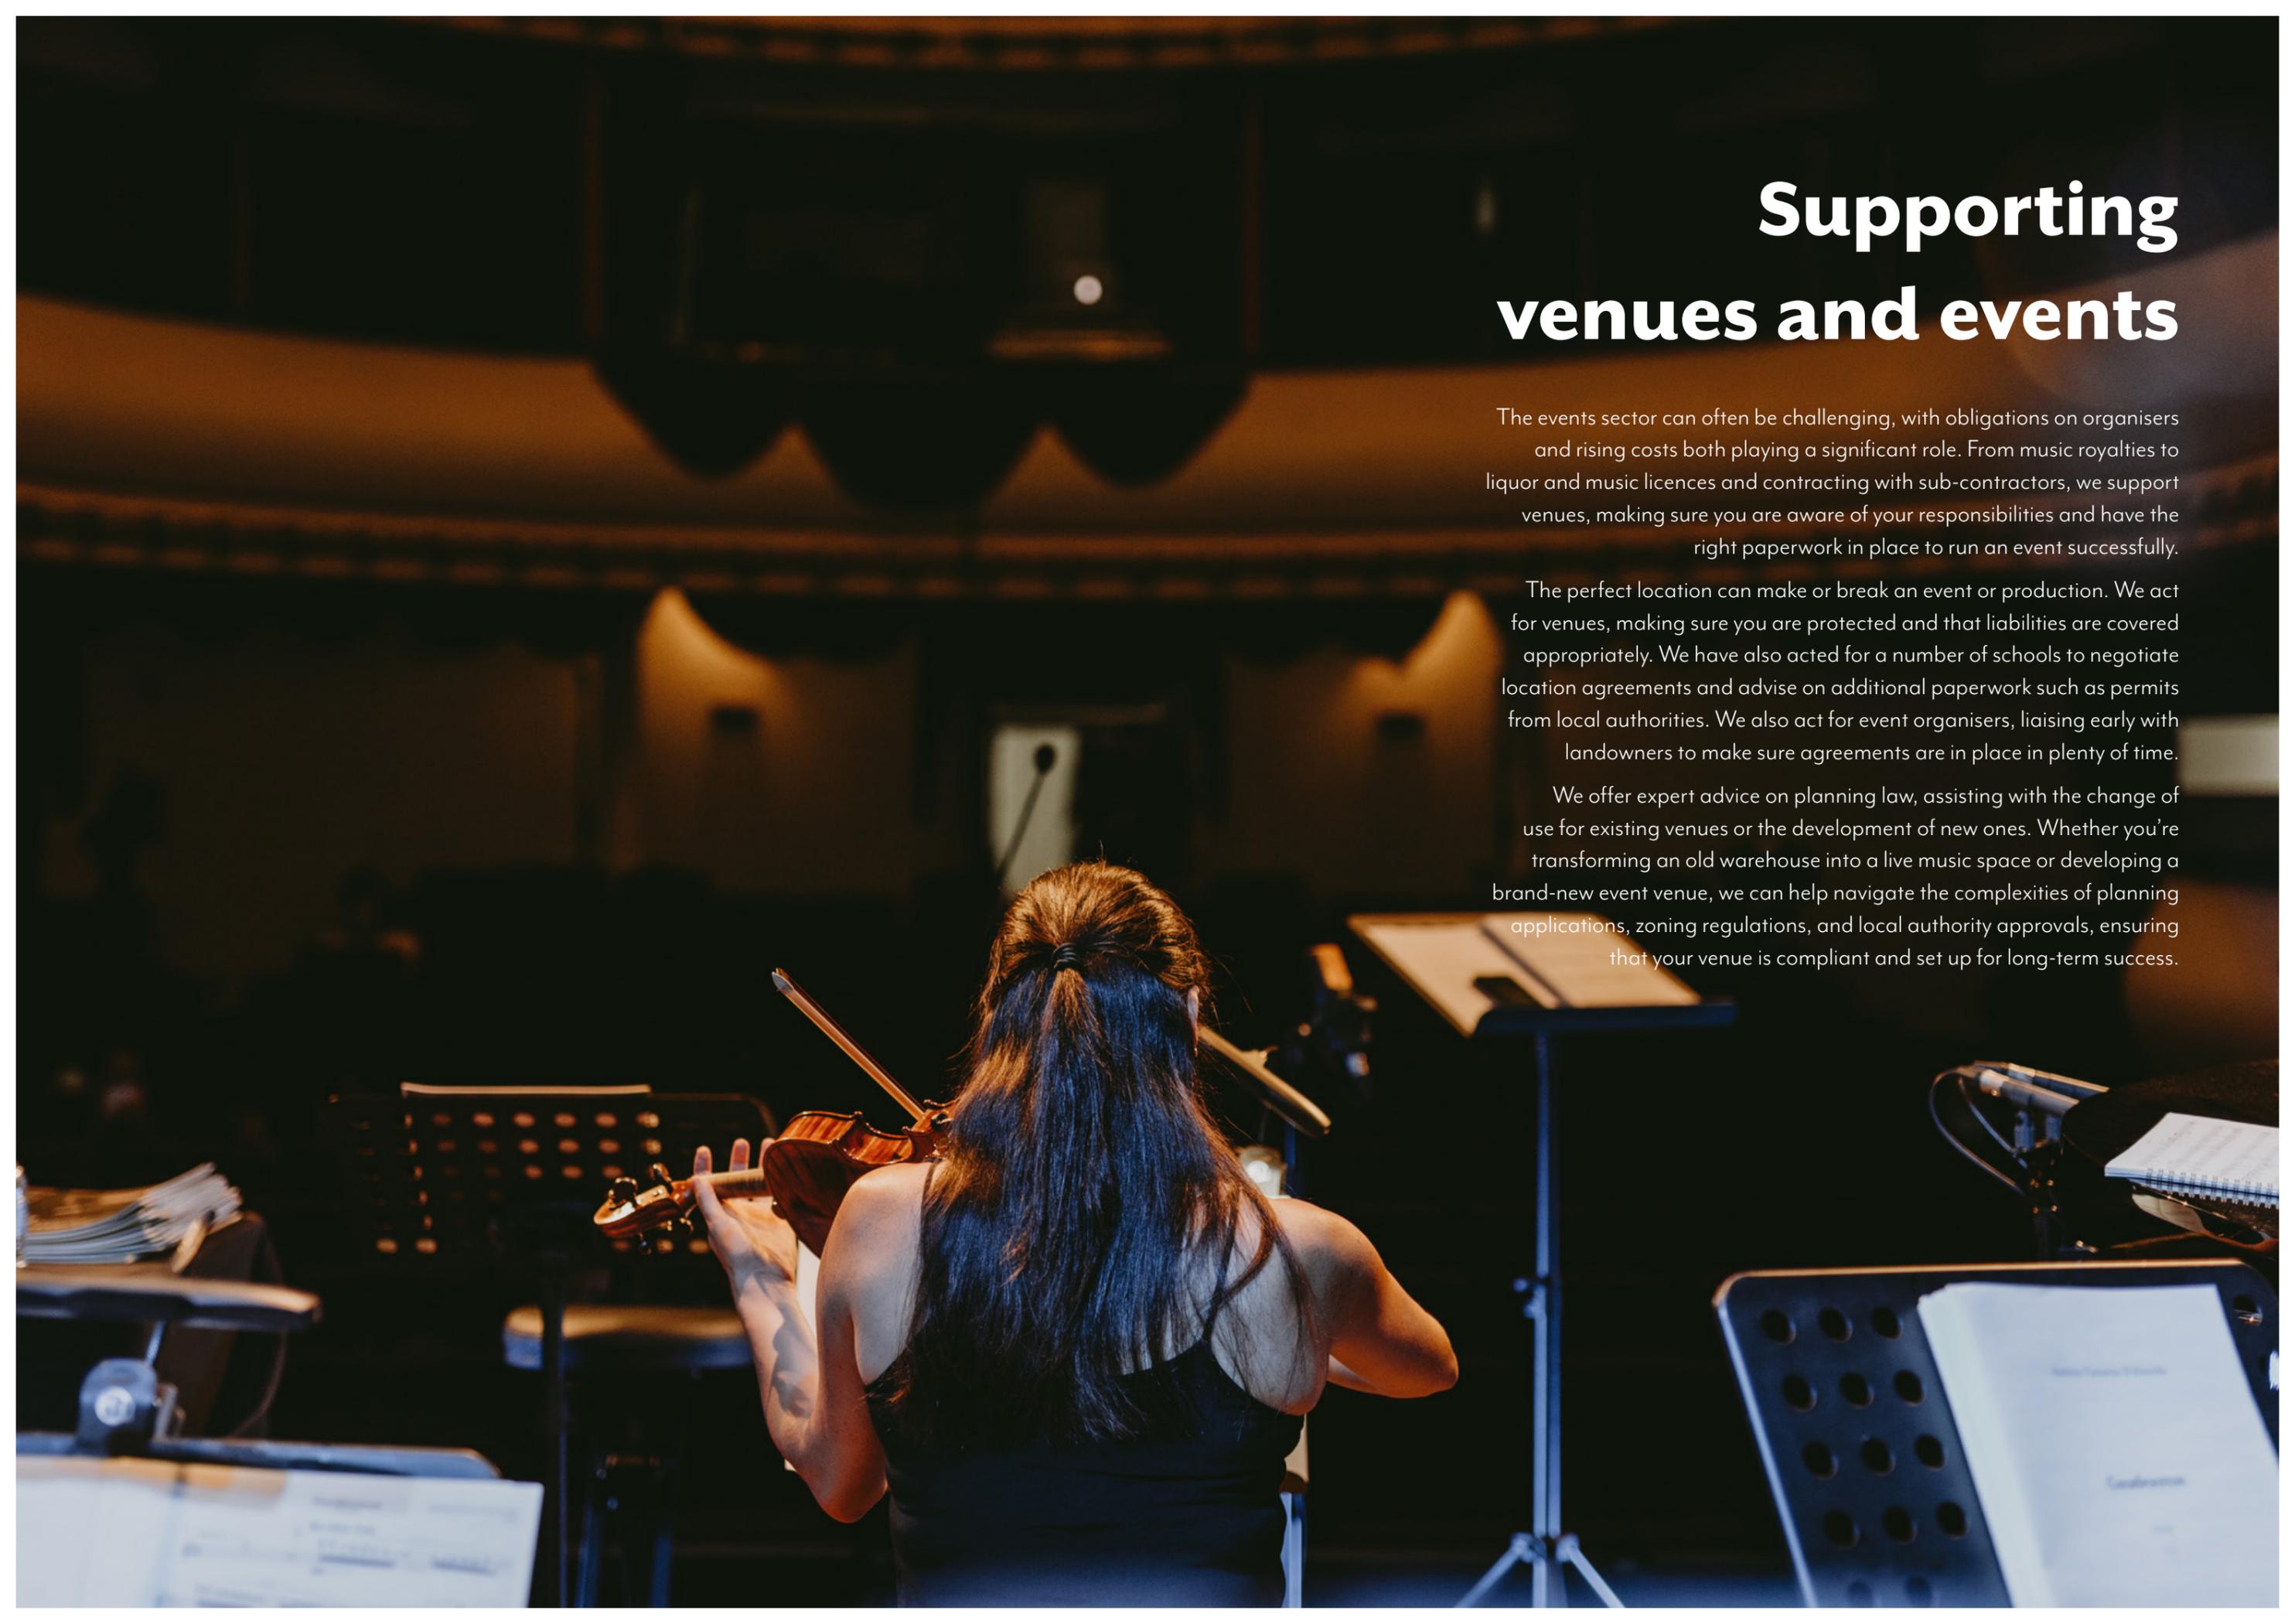

We create contracts for agents, actors, production agencies and rights holders. We cover everything from protecting IP or image rights through to the drafting of film distribution rights agreements. We advise on all steps of film and music production. We also advise musicians, and their managers, on the most appropriate structure to use (such as an LLP) as well as management agreements, managing music rights and profit distribution.

Client quote

A violinist with long dark hair, seen from behind, is performing on a stage. She is wearing a black sleeveless top and is playing a violin. The stage is dimly lit with warm, golden light. In the background, there are music stands with sheet music and a microphone. The overall atmosphere is that of a live concert performance.

Supporting venues and events

The events sector can often be challenging, with obligations on organisers and rising costs both playing a significant role. From music royalties to liquor and music licences and contracting with sub-contractors, we support venues, making sure you are aware of your responsibilities and have the right paperwork in place to run an event successfully.

The perfect location can make or break an event or production. We act for venues, making sure you are protected and that liabilities are covered appropriately. We have also acted for a number of schools to negotiate location agreements and advise on additional paperwork such as permits from local authorities. We also act for event organisers, liaising early with landowners to make sure agreements are in place in plenty of time.

We offer expert advice on planning law, assisting with the change of use for existing venues or the development of new ones. Whether you're transforming an old warehouse into a live music space or developing a brand-new event venue, we can help navigate the complexities of planning applications, zoning regulations, and local authority approvals, ensuring that your venue is compliant and set up for long-term success.

Business foundations and growth

In the fast-moving world of film, media, and entertainment, establishing a solid business foundation is crucial. Whether you're setting up a production company, managing a venue, or organising events, the right business structure can significantly impact your operations, tax obligations, and potential exposure to liabilities. We offer expert advice on selecting the appropriate structure—be it a sole trader, partnership, limited liability partnership (LLP), or limited company—and help with the formation of governance frameworks, shareholder agreements, and internal policies.

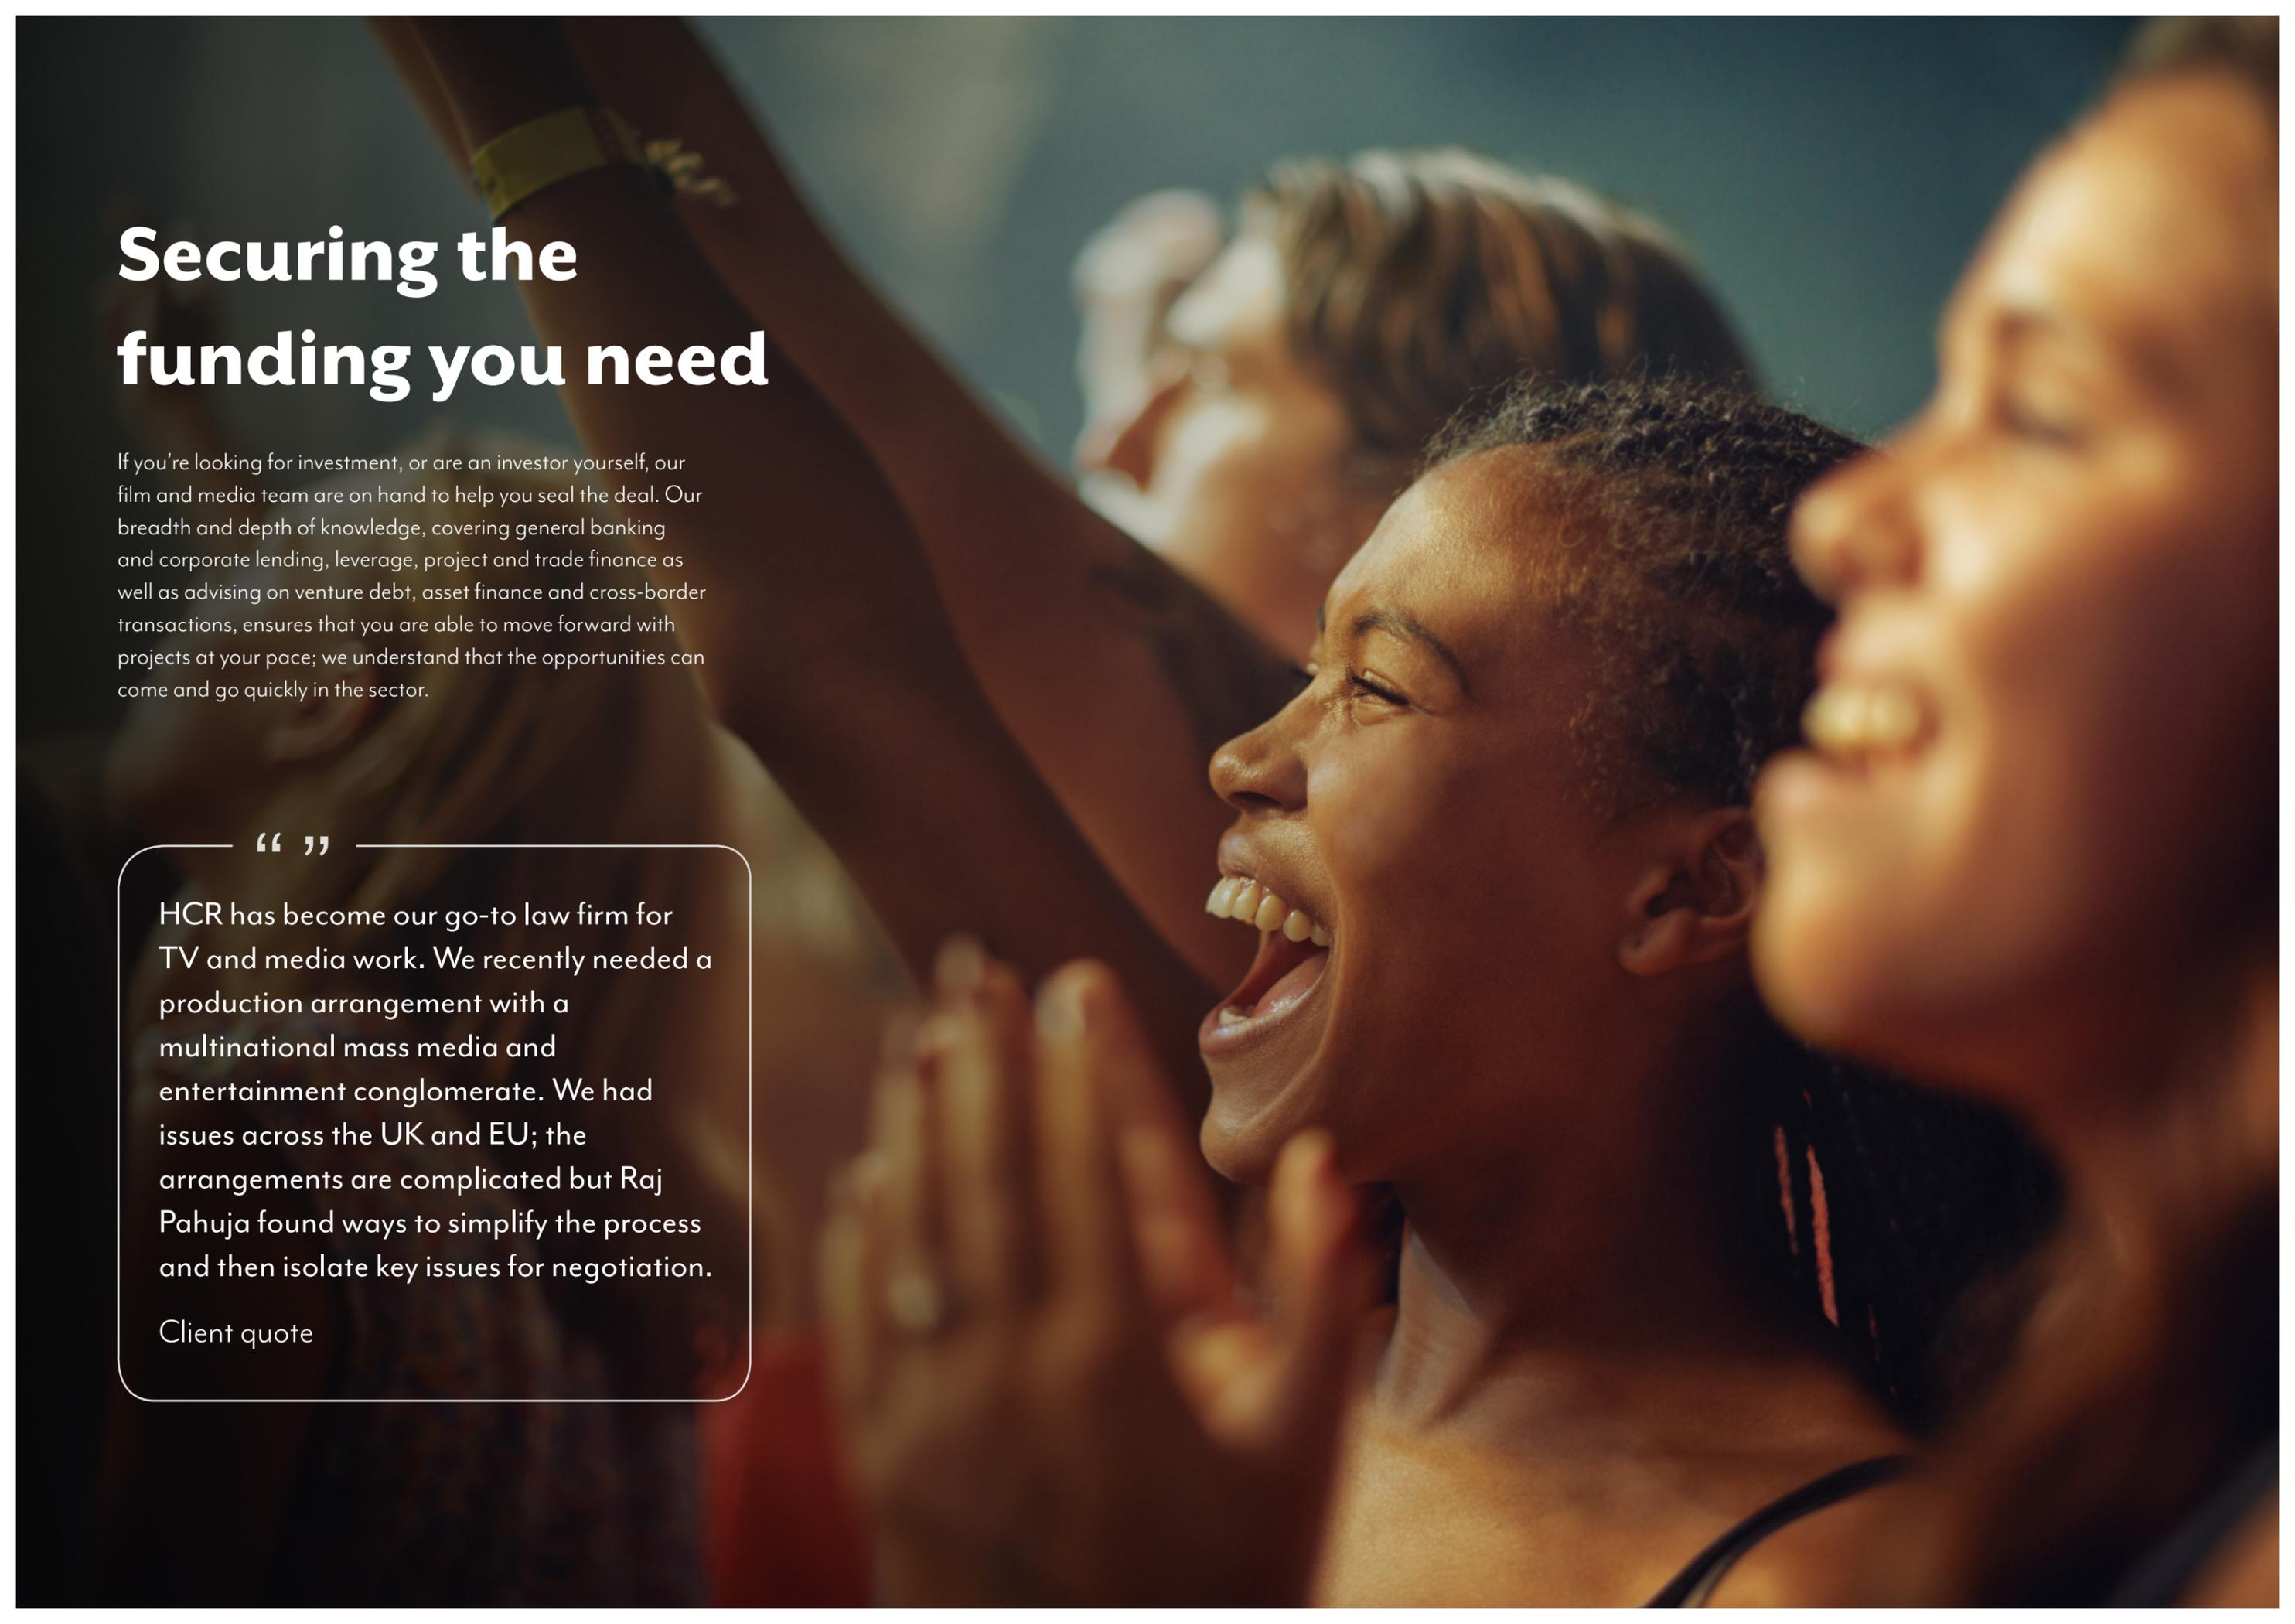

In addition to business structuring, we provide corporate law advice tailored to the sector. Our team supports clients with mergers, acquisitions, joint ventures, contract negotiations, and corporate governance, ensuring that your business stays compliant and poised for growth in this dynamic industry.

Licences and permits

Licences and permits are fundamental to operating in the film, media, and entertainment industries. We provide comprehensive support to ensure your business complies with all relevant regulations. Whether you're securing premises licences for venues, or managing security or event-specific licences, our team ensures you're covered.

HCR has become our go-to law firm for TV and media work. We recently needed a production arrangement with a multinational mass media and entertainment conglomerate. We had issues across the UK and EU; the arrangements are complicated but Raj Pahuja found ways to simplify the process and then isolate key issues for negotiation.
